Vasodilatory shock remains a major problem in medical practice and a frequent complication of the acute phase of trauma, sepsis and resuscitation. I.v. infusion of nitroprusside is a simple and effective means of treating such refractory shock. In severe cases of shock, the infusion of large doses of nitroprusside results in a significant reduction in systemic vascular resistance. It is effective even when blood volume replacement is inadequate. The cardiovascular effects of nitroprusside appear to be mediated by the selective inhibition of guanylate cyclase activity. However, the use of nitroprusside is associated with a significant incidence of cyanide intoxication. The risk of toxicity is reduced by routine use of a slow infusion, and careful attention to the electrocardiographic monitoring of vital signs. I personally believe in this concept, and I also look at the number of downloads to determine its popularity, but it's not very scientific to say that a theme is good because it has hundreds of downloads and negative reviews. There is a potential for bias. There is a potential for bias. I understand what you are saying but the sad part is that you will never know if you don't do the testing. I wish I could do it, but a lot of people (who download stuff) don't read through the reviews. They are looking for it and they download it. So it is no surprise when they say it is good or bad. They wouldn't know if the theme was bad or good if they didn't know how bad it was. BTW I tried a few themes and I am not a happy camper when it comes to themes.
