The new installment in theA· Afternoon Refreshers, Weekend Refreshers and an Important Update The last ten days have been busy with our own things. Besides lots of meetings and expos, we've been having lots of fun with experimenting with new ideas and the always interesting process of fast prototyping, trying to feel what it would be like to be part of a motorcycle team again. These two weeks of our training camp weren't a normal training camp for us, more like a four-day training camp. In the mean time, all the team preparations have been going on very fast. The riders went for a ride the next morning, they did the first lap of the track and the data was all collected. And as you can already read in the title of this post, some of the riders also went out for a big weekend to relax and have some fun after the exhausting month we had. Let's start with the last piece of news from the end of our training camp... We could have fit a larger crowd to our official "Family BBQ" which we had on Saturday at the track's paddock. We only had five people to share the spot with, but we all had a great time, talking, eating and dancing with the local Hungarian community. We

It can be implied that, in z=x all variable x's members are copied to z. So z.i should be the same as x.i but somehow it is not. Why? A: because struct members in C are first initialized from left to right in the order in which they are declared, then from right to left in the order in which they appear in the struct. See for example A: struct foo x, y, z; is equivalent to struct foo x; struct foo y; struct foo z; and in your structs the order goes left to right: int i; int j; x.i = 0; y.j = 0; z.i = x.i; so at last z.i will be equal to x.i Uptake of molybdenum in cardiac mitochondr
