Mar 17 History: 1998 Developed by MADSCAPE and published by RockStar The original concept for the game was conceived in 1997 after discussions between the development team of Wizardry 9 and Hiroyuki Minoshima, a member of the team of Wizardry 8. The title of the game was revealed as Rune Factory and the development team was selected as World Co, Ltd. however production began in the year 2000, but the game was cancelled about 8 months later. The development team was later hired by the development team of Nights into Dreams to develop a new remake of Wizardry 8. After 4 years the team released Wizardry 8 HD, which was a success and the original team of World Co. Ltd. launched a new game called, Stone Ocean (Producer: Yuji Toriyama) that was to be announced as a new Wizardry title. But the announcement of the game was cancelled and just like the Wizardry 8 remake it was never released. Then the team was later hired by the development team of Armored Core 4 to develop a new Arms Tower game called Armored Core: Masters of Zenith. A lot of talented members of the development team were recruited and the game was to have a similar action RPG style. However, it was cancelled so the team formed a new company called Archipelago Co. Ltd. which would later become a subsidiary of Telenet Japan. The game was then renamed as ELDEN RING. The development team decided to start new development from scratch after the cancellation of the previous Arms Tower. As a result of the change in title the game was changed from an action RPG to a fantasy RPG. During the development process of the game a lot of tracks were recorded to be used in the game. Since the new concept for the game was an action RPG RockStar Studios agreed to join the development. However, due to the release of Rockstar's Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, Rockstar decided to partner with Madsala to help out on future projects. After the completion of ARMS Tower the new company changed their name to Archipelago Co. Ltd. and
